LOWELL, Mass.; November 8, 2009 – On Saturday, November 21st from 7-10:30PM The Revolving Museum is hosting a House Warming Party at their new location at 122 Western Avenue. Everyone is invited to learn more about the museum's youth programs at this special event that includes an evening of music, food and fun. The festivities include a fashion art auction, music and live performances, along with light refreshments and a cash bar. Tours of the new facilities will be offered throughout the night.

Home Is Where the Art Is introduces everyone to the museum's new location with a fundraiser and festive party. Musical guests include Josh Beetler and The Big Sway. Josh Beetler's guitar music strives for musical variety and expression. He has performed in groups as diverse as jazz big bands, metal, funk bands, cover bands, blues/rock groups, and solo acoustic performances. You can check out his music at <http://www.myspace.com/joshbeetler>. The evening will conclude with a musical performance that is guaranteed to get you up dancing! The Big Sway comprised of guitarist Tim Zucco, bassist Joe MacFazden, and Drummer Skye Mazuroski is a local three piece funk, punk, and groove band with an upbeat vibe. A special performance by FreeVerse! will introduce guests to the Spoken Word Poetry of the city of Lowell. FreeVerse recently partnered with The Revolving Museum and is holding after school sessions to teach teens to write about their feelings and experiences so that they can have the courage to be heard. There will be a performance by one of the lead instructors as well as students currently in the program.

“While the party will take place in the A-Mill loading dock at Western Avenue Studios, tours of The Revolving Museum’s new space will be happening all evening. We are excited to show everyone our new home that brings classrooms for afterschool teen programs with office and art space under one roof,” says Diane Testa, Executive Director.
